FOREWORD

The Museum Collection is one of the most important but least publicized of the Museum's activities. Since the acquisition of the Bliss Bequest in 1934, still by far the most valuable group of paintings owned by the Museum, the Collection in its Department of Painting and Sculpture has grown rapidly until it now numbers nearly 700 objects. It is probably the most comprehensive collection of 20th century art in the world.

A group of the Museum's friends have generously contributed to this Collection: Mrs. John D. Rockefeller, Jr., donor of purchase funds and of several collections, particularly within the field of American art; Mrs. Simon Guggenheim, whose gifts have made possible the purchase of several masterpieces; A. Conger Goodyear, the Museum's first President and donor particularly of sculpture and American painting; Stephen C. Clark, whose gifts include a number of the Collection's finest paintings; Nelson A. Rockefeller, Edward M. M. Warburg and many others who have given money or works of art.

In his introduction Mr. Barr tells something of the history of the Collection, its ever-changing composition, the uses to which it is put and the policies which have affected its formation. But there is one aspect of the Collection which seems to me to have a special meaning at the present time. This is its catholicity and tolerance. It is natural and proper that American artists should be included in greater numbers than those of any other country. But it is equally important in a period when Hitler has made a lurid fetish of nationalism that no fewer than twenty-four nations other than our own should also be represented in the Museum Collection.

This collection of the art of many nations is a symbol of freedom, freedom of the artist, and through the artist of every individual to speak his mind without fear of persecution. And beyond individual freedom, it symbolizes the freedom of nations to cherish not only their own works of art but those of other peoples as well so that international understanding and esteem may be furthered through art which can thus participate in the defeat of international hatred and contempt against which we are now fighting on the field of battle.

INTRODUCTION

Thirteen years ago in its first manifesto published in the early Fall of 1929, the newborn Museum of Modern Art announced its intention "first of all . . . to establish a collection of the immediate ancestors of the modern movement . . . and the most important living masters" by means of "gifts, bequests, purchases and semi-permanent loans." A program of loan exhibitions as a means of testing public interest was announced at the same time. A few weeks later came the crash, followed by years of depression, so that raising purchase funds for the proposed collection and providing galleries for its exhibition had to be postponed. As a result the Museum's comparatively limited resources in personnel, money and space during its first ten years were given over principally to its program of loan exhibitions with their catalogs. During this time the Museum Collection was increased, at first through gift or bequest and later, toward the end of the decade, through purchase. But it was exhibited only as an occasional stop-gap in the exhibition calendar.

In 1939 the new building tripled the Museum's exhibition space so that today in the Museum's 13th year it is planned at last to set aside half the galleries for the Museum Collection in all its divisions.

The Museum Collection

The Museum Collection is made up of works of art divided among the Museum's departments which at present comprise (1) Painting, Sculpture and Graphic Arts; (2) Architecture; (3) Film Library; (4) Industrial Design; (5) Photography, and (6) the Library, which for the time being includes the Dance Archives. The Museum Collection does not include documentary material such as forms the bulk of the collections of the Library and Department of Architecture, nor does it include material in the Study Collection which is maintained primarily for the use of students.

The Painting and Sculpture Collection

This catalog lists paintings in oil, watercolor, etc., pastels, collages with color, sculpture and constructions — a part only of the collection of one Museum department. Drawings, prints, posters are not included.

Some 700 works by over 300 artists are listed. (Works acquired after July 1942 are not included; nor are certain recently acquired Latin American works the accession of which is to be announced during the coming season.) The analytical indexes on pages 12-19 give some idea of the variety and range of the collection. The United States comes first in number both of artists and works, followed by France (and the School of Paris), then Mexico and Germany. The collection is overwhelmingly of the 20th century. Only seven per cent of the collection is 19th century and this number is divided nearly equally between American "folk" or "popular" art and European painting of the latter part of the century.

How the Collection Is Used

The original and still the most important purpose of the collection is exhibition in the Museum itself and for this many of the best works are reserved. But in the space at present allotted only about 70 paintings and 35 sculptures — less than one-sixth of the collection — can be properly shown at one time. As a consequence a large part of the collection is used for touring shows by the Department of Circulating Exhibitions and the Educational Program or for special loans to other museums.

Acquisitions: Gifts, Purchases, Exchanges; Extended Loans

Before the Museum was a year old it had already received important gifts of American painting and European sculpture. The excellent collection of French paintings assembled by the Museum's first Vice-President, Lillie P. Bliss, was bequeathed to the Museum in 1931 with certain wise and challenging conditions which were met by the raising of an endowment fund in 1934.

Since then four collections, particularly rich in American art, assembled by Mrs. John D. Rockefeller, Jr., and a number of European masterpieces given by Mrs. Simon Guggenheim head the list of numerous gifts from friends of the Museum. The two donors named above have also provided most of the purchase funds.

To the total value of the collection purchases have contributed only about one-tenth; the balance is about equally divided between gifts and the Bliss Bequest. However, acquisition by exchange, or by gift originally recommended to the donor by the Museum, bring to about one-fourth of the total that part of the collection actively selected as well as accepted by the Museum.

During its first seven years the Museum was practically without purchase funds and even today money for buying comes from individuals rather than from endowment or the general budget. Fortunately donors of purchase funds have been remarkably liberal in making their conditions: two funds have been designated for the art of the United States only; another for Latin American art; another exclusively for works of great value and importance; but the balance, almost half of the total, has been unrestricted.

A few of the works listed in this catalog are not the property of the Museum but are extended loans made to the collection for an indefinite period, in some cases with the understanding that if not withdrawn they will be bequeathed to the Museum.

All acquisitions must be approved by the Acquisitions Committee selected principally from the Board of Trustees.

The Collection and Other Museums

The collection is supplemented and to some extent duplicated by other New York museum collections. American painting of the past fifty years is widely represented at the Metropolitan Museum of Art and the Whitney Museum of American Art, which also has a large collection of American sculpture. The Museum of Living Art and the Solomon R. Guggenheim Foundation specialize in cubist, abstract or non-objective painting. While in the field of modern art the Museum's collection is more comprehensive and less specialized than any of these, the Museum believes that the public will best be served if duplication is kept at a minimum.

Permanence of the Collection

The collection, to use former President Good-year's phrase, is permanent as a stream is permanent — with a changing content. Obviously it could not stay "modern" unless it did change, gradually but completely. So far addition has surpassed subtraction, for the collection is young. Disposal may be by sale, exchange or gift to other museums. Already certain older paintings have been sold or exchanged for more recent works, transactions involving about eight per cent of the total value of the collection. Works already disposed of are listed in this catalog, but will be dropped from the next edition.

The Collection and the Museum

Yet even though the collection may seem transitory in comparison with those of other museums it takes on a certain air of permanence in relation to the Museum's kaleidoscopic program of temporary and circulating exhibitions, film shows, concerts and lectures. It is one of the important functions of the Museum Collection to give a core, a spine, a background for study and comparison, a sense of relative stability and continuity to an institution dedicated to the changing art of our unstable world.

Acquisition Policy

The Museum has followed no rigid or dogmatic policy in forming its collection, but a number of factors already mentioned have affected its acquisitions. Among these are the predominance of gifts and bequests over purchases; various restrictions which have affected over half the purchase funds; the uses made of the collection, particularly the rapid increase in traveling exhibitions sent out by the Museum;

the acquisition policies of several other museums in New York City; and finally the necessity for continuous metabolic change within the collection.

With these factors in mind the acquisition policy of the Museum's collection of painting and sculpture may be summarized briefly: the period of acquisition is approximately the previous fifty years, with emphasis upon the later rather than the earlier decades. The field includes the art of all countries though, naturally, more art of the United States is acquired than that of any other nation. No kind of art has been particularly favored, but work of an academic or decadent nature whether Impressionist or Abstract has been neglected. ("Academic" and "decadent" refer simply to a lack of new forms or fresh ideas.) Though the collection already illustrates much of the history of art during the past half century, acquisitions are made primarily for their artistic rather than for their historical value.

Of course artistic values change and today's masterpiece is sometimes tomorrow's bore. The Museum, with its collection of some 700 paintings and sculptures, is aware that it may often guess wrong in its acquisitions. When it acquires a dozen recent paintings it will be lucky if in ten years three will still seem worth looking at, if in twenty years only one should survive. For the future the important problem is to acquire this one: the other nine will be forgiven — and forgotten. But meanwhile we live in the present and, for the present, these other nine will seem just as necessary and useful, serving their purpose by inclusion in exhibitions, so long as their artistic lives shall last. Sooner or later time will eliminate them.

Time has already simplified the problem of choosing works done in the earlier years of the Museum's field — the masterpieces by van Gogh, Rousseau and Ensor for instance, which are the only 19th century works thus far acquired by purchase or exchange. But works done in 1910 or 1920 are somewhat less easy to select. And when we are confronted by the scores of younger artists of the present moment the choice becomes very difficult — but at the same time the obligation to choose is greater, even if at the risk of eventually having guessed wrong nine times out of ten. (A talented "younger artist" named van Gogh died having sold only one painting, and that was not to a Museum!)

Publication of the Collection

This abbreviated catalog will be followed by a series of illustrated handbooks or guides and possibly an elaborately detailed documentation such as has already been accorded the paintings in the Catalog of the Lillie P. Bliss Collection, which the Museum published in 1934. Scholars are of course invited to study and publish material in the Collection and for this purpose to make use of the Curators' records and the Museum Library.

Acknowledgments

Besides those who have given works of art or provided purchase funds, the Museum is indebted to many friends who have given their advice and services in forming the Collection, especially the Acquisitions Committee, which has been chairmanned successively by A. Conger Goodyear, Samuel A. Lewisohn, Edward M. M. Warburg and James Thrall Soby; and the Advisory Committee, which for many years has believed in the importance of the Museum Collection and in fact raised the Museum's first purchase fund in 1936. In 1941 the Advisory Committee under the chairmanship of William A. M. Burden presented to the Trustees a thorough, critical report on the Collection.

Among the members of the staff, Dorothy C. Miller, Associate Curator of the Department of Painting and Sculpture, and her assistant, Elise Van Hook, have contributed invaluable to the general study and care of the collection, and in particular to the preparation of this catalog. To this end the vigilant work of the Museum Registrar, Dorothy H. Dudley, and her assistant, Dorothy L. Lytle, has also been indispensable. The catalog was designed and seen through the press by Monroe Wheeler, Director of Exhibitions and Publications, and by Holger E. Hagen, Publications Manager. The cover design is by Carlos Dyer.

INDEX OF ARTISTS BY MOVEMENT OR SCHOOL

This index includes only those movements and schools represented in the Museum Collection. The brief descriptions are not intended to be definitions. Each descriptive note is followed by a list of artists who represent the particular school or movement.

It is important to note that many artists represented in the Collection have taken no part in movements or "isms"; others have participated only briefly or passively; others, still, have taken part in several.

Abstract Art

Painting, sculpture, constructions, and prints with little or no resemblance to objects in nature. Artists whose work has little resemblance to natural objects are placed in the first list below under the title Near Abstractions; the second list, Pure Abstractions, includes artists whose work has no intentional resemblance to objects in the real world.

The first pure abstract paintings were done by Kandinsky in Munich, about 1911; these were irregular and fluid in design, spontaneous in spirit and created a tradition which such artists as Miro, Matta and Gorky have maintained. The Russian, Malevich (1913), and Hollander, Mondrian, influenced by Cubism, founded a second kind of abstract art which made use of geometrical figures such as squares, circles. Both traditions have many followers in the United States today.

NEAR ABSTRACTIONS: Arp; Braque (1914); Brancusi; Calder (1939); Carles; Cézanne (Foliage, Rocky Ridge); Davis (1940); Dove (1940); Duchamp-Villon; Ernst (1926); Gabo; Gleizes; Gontcharova; Gonzales; Gorky (1938); Gris; Hélion; Klee (1929); Larionov (1911); Laurens; Le Corbusier; Léger; Lipchitz; Matisse (1916); Miro (1926-33); Moore (1938); Pevsner (c. 1926); Picasso (1918, 1927-28); Xcéron.

PURE ABSTRACTIONS: Arp (1916, 1938-39); Berdecio; Biederman; Calder (1934); Delaunay; Ferren; Gallatin; Gorky (1937); Greene; Hep-worth; Kandinsky; Lissitzky; Malevich; Mondrian; Moore (1934); Nicholson; Noguchi; Pereira; Pevsner (1913); Rodchenko; Schwitters; Survae; Vantongerloo (1929); Villon; Wilfred.

American Scene

Pictures of landscapes, farms, streets, and people of an obviously American character, often with a picturesque local or regional flavor and sometimes with a humorous, sentimental, sociological or satirical intention. The recent American Scene movement became self-conscious shortly before 1930, but was anticipated by many individuals, notably Sloan, Luks, and Bellows in the early 20th century; Bingham, Mount, Johnson, Homer, Eakins and Currier and Ives in the 19th century.

Beal; Bellows; Benton; Blumenschein; Burchfield (1920); Cadmus; Coleman; Cook; Dalstrom; Dehn; Emmet; Fausett; Fossum; Friedman; Gropper; Hart; Hopper; Kane; Kantor; Kingman; Lawrence; Levine; Martin; Pickett; Prendergast (1901); Prestopino; Santo; Sheeler; Thomas. Cf. also: Early American Folk Art, page 81.

Constructivism

A movement related technically and esthetically to architecture and engineering as much as to sculpture. It began about 1914 in Russia under the influence of Parisian Cubism, and later spread throughout Europe and America. Constructions are often built of metal, celluloid or glass and are usually abstract in design.

The moving constructions of the American, Alexander Calder, are called "mobiles" by the artist (a term originally suggested by Marcel Duchamp).

Gabo; Pevsner. Cf. also: Biederman; Calder (1934, '39); Giacometti; Heythum; Hughes; Lissitzky.

Cubism

A movement in painting which involved the disintegration or transformation of natural forms into compositions of flat, usually angular and sometimes overlapping or transparent planes. Cubism began in Paris in the art of Picasso and Braque about 1907, and spread gradually throughout the world, influencing profoundly not only painting and sculpture during the early 20th century, but also the decorative arts and architecture.

Braque (1911–28); Duchamp-Villon; Gleizes; Gris; La Fresnaye; Laurens (1918); Léger (1920); Metzinger; Picasso (1906–18); Rivera (1914). Cf. also: Demuth (1920); Mopp; N. Spencer (1921).

Dadaism

Dadaism as a movement began in Zurich in 1916 and spread to Berlin, Cologne, New York and Paris before it died about 1922. Inspired by a bitter contempt for the folly of the War and the Post-War, the Dadaists were outrageously iconoclastic, mocking the conventional and sacrosanct both in art and life. They developed, however, certain psychological, technical and esthetic experiments of originality and lasting interest.

Arp (1916–20); Ernst (1920); Ray; Schwitters. Cf. also: Duchamp; Klee (1922).

Expressionism

In its broadest sense "Expressionist" has been used to describe the work of almost all modern artists who reject the imitation of the outer world of reality for the expression of an inner world of feeling and imagination. In a narrower sense, illustrated by most of the artists listed below, Expressionism refers to spontaneous, free, intuitive distortion or exaggeration of the ordinary forms and colors of nature in order to achieve an emotional or esthetic effect. This would exclude Cubism as too calculated and elaborate; Surrealism because it is too much concerned with subject matter and subconscious symbolism; stylized distortion for decorative effect because it is emotionally superficial.

The word "Expressionism" was first used in Munich about 1911, but van Gogh, Cézanne and Gauguin had long before shown the way which ultimately found innumerable followers the world over.

Barlach; Beckmann; Bloom; Cézanne; Chagall; Ensor; Gauguin; van Gogh; Heckel; Kirchner; Kokoschka; Kopman; Lehmbruck; Levine; Lipchitz (after 1930); Marin; Matisse (1908, '14); Modigliani; Nolde; Picasso (1906–07); Rouault; Soutine; Weber (1930).

Fauvism

From the French fauve, a wild beast. A short-lived but important movement coming to a climax in Paris in 1905–06 with the participation of Matisse, Rouault, Derain, Braque and others. The Fauves carried further the Expressionist distortion of form and bold, free use of color initiated by Cézanne, Gauguin and van Gogh.

Derain (1906); Rouault (1906). Cf. also: Matisse (1909).

Futurism

An Italian movement which began about 1910 and spread noisily throughout Europe and America in the succeeding decade. The Futurists, led by Boccioni, and influenced by Neo-Impressionism and Cubism, attempted to expand inordinately the limits of painting and sculpture by trying to incorporate in their works the complex of motion, time, space, energy, light and even states of mind. They spurned the past and extolled the speed and clatter of the modern world.

Not represented (except by Boccioni drawings).

"Immaculates"

A name applied to a group of Americans, who, about 1920, in reaction to the free brushwork of both the Impressionists and Expressionists, developed a technique of extremely precise lines and clean surfaces, in some cases based on a conscious emulation of photography. This "precisionist" tradition is still very active in American painting.

Blume; Demuth (1920 and after); Dickinson; Sheeler.

Impressionism

The vanguard movement in European painting during the 1870s. The Impressionists, inspired by the color theories of physicists, and indifferent to traditional esthetic values, tried to represent nature in a shimmer of light and atmosphere by means of tiny vibrating brushstrokes. Though Impressionism has now degenerated into an academic formula, it affected, often by reaction, many of the great painters of the past sixty years.

Bonnard; Pissarro; Renoir.

Magic Realism

A term sometimes applied to the work of painters who by means of an exact realistic technique try to make plausible and convincing their improbable, dreamlike or fantastic visions. The Surrealists often employ magic realism—as did the 15th century Flemish painters of hell and holy miracles. Magic Realism was originally used to describe the work of the Swiss painter, Böcklin (1827–1901).

Atherton; Blume; Campbell; de Chirico (1911, '14); Dali; Ernst (1923, '36); Magritte; Oelze; Roy; Tanguy. Cf. also: Harnett; Rousseau.

Merzism

A variety of Dadaism practised in Hanover by Kurt Schwitters and his followers during the 1920s, and characterized by the employment of miscellaneous waste materials in constructions and collages (pasted paper compositions).

Schwitters.

Metaphysical Painting (pittura metafisica)

An Italian movement founded in 1915–16 by Giorgio de Chirico and Carlo Carrà. In a mood of philosophical and metaphysical speculation they painted perspectives haunted by ominous, enigmatic mannequins or paradoxical still-lives. The movement lasted until the mid-20s and was anticipated by de Chirico's own earlier work of 1911–15.

Cf. de Chirico (1911, 1914) and also drawings (1916–18).

Modern Primitives

The most frequently used name for artists who are otherwise called naives, self-taught, modern folk artists, Sunday painters, or artists of the people. Without training and belonging to no school or tradition, their art at its best holds its own with that of professionals, because of their intuitive, unhackneyed mastery of form and their simplicity of mind and heart.

Bauchant; Bombois; Canadé; Hirshfield; Hunt; Kane; Papsdorf; Peyronnet; Pickett; Rousseau; Santo; Sullivan; Vivin; Wallis. Cf. also: Early American Folk Art, pages 81 and 82.

Naives

See Modern Primitives.

Neoclassicism

A style based upon the art of classical antiquity. It was revived, partly in a spirit of parody, by the ponderous or pretty figure paintings of Picasso and his followers about 1920. A vulgarized neoclassic style has also found favor in Germany and Italy during the past ten years.

Picasso (1923, no. 487).

Neo-Impressionism

A movement founded by Seurat and Signac, about 1885, with the purpose of making Impressionism into a logical, methodical scientific system. They turned the irregular brushstrokes and improvised color of the Impressionists into dots of pure primary colors and tried to codify the emotional effects of lines and tones. In various ways Neo-Impressionism greatly influenced painting during the period 1890-1914.

Seurat; Signac.

Neoplasticism

The name given in 1920 by the Dutch painter Piet Mondrian to his kind of abstract art, which consists in dividing the rectangular canvas into subordinate white or colored rectangles by means of heavy black bars, varied in width and adjusted within a hair's breadth to achieve a perfection of proportion and balance.

Mondrian.

Neoromanticism

A movement originating in Paris during the mid-1920s among a group of young painters, mostly of Russian birth, whose mysterious and melancholy pictures showed variously the influence of pre-Cubist Picasso, early de Chirico, and certain Italian masters of the past.

Bérard; Berman; Tchelitchev.

Neue Sachlichkeit (New Objectivity)

A revival of realism in Germany during the 1920s, in some cases smoothly neoclassic in flavor, but for the most part truculently factual with an admixture of social criticism and bizarre or ironic humor.

Dix.

Nonobjectivism

A name for abstract paintings which are entirely free of any reference to objects in nature. The term was probably first used about 1918 in Moscow by Alexander Rodchenko, who applied it to the work of himself and his followers when they seceded from the Suprematists (q.v.). Cf. Abstract Art.

Rodchenko.

Pointillism

A nickname for Neo-Impressionism (q.v.). It refers to the Neo-Impressionist technique of painting in little dots or "points" of color.

See Neo-Impressionism.

Post-Impressionism

The art of Cézanne, van Gogh, Gauguin and others who in various ways repudiated or transformed Impressionism during the 1880s, thereby laying the foundations for much of the "modern" art of the early 20th century.

Cézanne; Degas (c. 1900); Ensor; Gauguin; van Gogh.

Primitives

See Modern Primitives.

Purism

A movement founded in Paris in 1918 by Ozenfant and Jeanneret (Le Corbusier) for the purpose of reforming Cubism by combining the flatly-tinted, simplified silhouettes of ordinary objects in compositions of severe and conscientious clarity.

Le Corbusier; Ozenfant (drawing).

Rayonism (Lutchism)

A name given in 1911 by Michael Larionov of Moscow to his near-abstract pictures which were composed of ray-like lines generated by and at the same time disintegrating the forms of nature.

Gontcharova (1912); Larionov (1911).

Regionalism

A movement in recent American painting which emphasizes the characteristics of a particular region of the United States. Cf. American Scene.

Self-Taught

See Modern Primitives.

Social Realism (Social Scenism, Social Consciousness)

An American art movement preoccupied with comment upon political, social and economic conditions. Flourishing during the depression of the 1930s, it was influenced somewhat by the Mexican mural painters of the previous decade. ("Socialist Realism" is the name given to the officially approved style in which the artists of the U.S.S.R. paint pictures of Soviet life.)

Fossum; Gropper; Harkavy; Levine; Orozco; Rivera (1928, '31); Shahn; Siporin; Siqueiros.

De Stijl (The Style)

A group of artists formed in Leyden in 1917 for the purpose of studying the principles of geometrical abstract design and applying them to painting, sculpture, architecture, furniture and typography.

Mondrian; Vantongerloo.

Suprematism

Founded by the Russian Malevich in 1913, Suprematism was the earliest abstract movement to use pure geometrical forms such as squares and circles.

Malevich.

Surrealism

A movement in literature and art founded in Paris in 1924 by the poet, André Breton, who defined it as: "Pure psychic automatism . . . thought's dictation, in the absence of all control exercised by the reason and outside all esthetic or moral preoccupation . . . Surrealism rests in the belief in the omnipotence of the dream." Surrealist painting in general pursued two courses in exploring the subconscious mind: "psychic automatism" in the "automatic" drawings and paintings of Masson and Miro; the "omnipotence of the dream" in the "hand-painted dream photographs" of Dali and Tanguy. Both methods are employed by Ernst. The Surrealists attempt to discredit ordinary reality by asserting that "nothing but the astonishing is beautiful." It is, internationally, one of the most important art movements of the past 20 years.

Arp (after 1924); Dali; Ernst (after 1923); Giacometti; Hayter; Magritte; Masson; Matta; Moore; Oelze; Seligmann. Cf. also: Blume (1930); Chagall; de Chirico (1911, '14); Dove; Eilshemius (1899); Ensor; Graves; Merrild; Picasso (1906-14, '27, '32); Quirt; Redon; Roy; Rousseau.

Symbolism and Synthetism

Terms used in 1889 by Gauguin and his followers to describe their paintings. Symbolism (borrowed from contemporary French poetry) referred to the fact that their paintings were symbols born of the imagination rather than mere records of observed fact; Synthetism refers to their use of broad, simple "synthetic" lines and colors as opposed to the analytical realism of the Impressionists.

Gauguin.

CATALOG AND ILLUSTRATIONS

Arrangement

The catalog is arranged alphabetically by artist's name (with the exception of the Early American Folk Art, page 81). The works of each artist are arranged chronologically.

Data about each work are listed in the following order:

Number: if marked by a dot (236) item is illustrated.

Title

Date: unless enclosed in parentheses the date given appears on the work itself.

Medium

Size: dimensions are given in inches; height precedes width.

Source of acquisition

Museum accession number: the year in which the work was acquired is indicated by the two digits following the decimal point. For example the number 149.37 means that the work was the 149th item acquired in 1937.

Reproduction reference: if an item not illustrated here is reproduced in some other of the Museum's publications a reference is given (for abbreviations see opposite page).

Items no longer in the collection are nevertheless recorded in this first published catalog; they are preceded by the words Sold or Exchanged.

Items followed by the words Dance Archives are designs for ballet costumes and scenery which are listed here as works of art in their own right though they are also included in the Dance Archives as documentary material. (See index page 19.)

This catalog does not include drawings, prints, or black and white collages (pasted paper compositions), or photographs, films, industrial or decorative arts, architectural models, etcetera, though reference is made to such objects in the museum collection if designed by an artist listed in this catalog.

Illustrations: approximately a fifth of the items have been illustrated; many others have been reproduced in other Museum publications.

Photographs or slides of any item may be obtained through the Museum's photograph clerk at a cost of $.50 (subject to change). Slides of any item may be rented from the Library; some color slides are also available. Color reproductions published by the Museum are mentioned in the catalog.
